JACKSON ACQUITTED

Chauffeur Found Not Guilty of Reckless Driving Last September.

New Haven, Dec. 13.—After a deliberation of over three hours yesterday afternoon the common pleas court jury which heard the case of John Jackson, the taxicab chauffeur charged with the accident that resulted in the injury to three persons at Milford last September, found him not guilty. Jackson was charged with driving at excessive speed near Indian river and running into an automobile driven by Miss Mabel Hughes. In the automobile with Miss Hughes at the time were Miss L. M. Marble and Benjamin Nelson, and all three were thrown off the Indian river bridge into the water and injured. Jackson insisted in court that his automobile did not strike the Hughes car and that he was in no way responsible for the accident. He was defended by Attorney Howard C. Webb. There is still a civil action pending against the chauffeur, Jackson, following the accident, was arrested in Milford and fined $50 and costs, from which he appealed to the common pleas court.

NEW HAVEN, COMPARATIVELY.

(New Haven Register.)

There's sound—and needed—common sense in the remark of Rev. William A. Bradley of the First Methodist church that New Haven is no worse than any other city of its size. For its abundant sense one may forgive him his descent to the common error—assuming that he was correctly reported—in saying that the newspapers exploit the present of vice. The newspapers simply print the happenings and sayings of their community as they come along. If the appearance of vice in New Haven is thereby exploited or magnified, let Mr. Bradley remember that some of the unjustified sayings have been traced to men who pass as ministers. That isn't his fault; and certainly it is not New Haven's.

Comparisons have a bad odor, oftentimes. It is not the whole of justice to New Haven to say it is no worse than any other city of its size any more than it is strict justice to other cities to claim that New Haven is better than they. We should have to qualify all around if we tend to go into comparisons. We should say that New Haven is in some respects better than any city of any size anywhere; that it is in many respects the equal of most cities of its size and opportunity; that in very few if any respects it is worse than other cities of its size and character.

But what do we gain by comparison after all? It is a cheap way to create virtue. It is safe to say that New Haven has very few respects in which it could not be improved. It has a multitude of faults and its peculiar problems. The faults and problems we should face in the absolute, and do our best to remove, without them without regard to comparison.

TWELVE MINUTES LOST.

The new train orders concerning cross-overs is reported to result in a loss of twelve minutes in the running time between New Haven and New York. It was expected that some time would be lost by the slowing-up process. It doesn't hurt the head and speed sacrifices safety, it is high time to make haste more slowly—and live longer.

The railroad company, in all probability, has not been wholly to blame for the attaining of the rate of speed which the eyes of the traveling public find disastrous. The demand for a long series of years past has been for trains that would make the distance between population centers in the shortest possible time. Commuters, too, who live at some distances from the city, have been clamoring for rapid transit, to cut down the time they had to spend daily upon trains. To meet these demands, a minute has been clipped off here, a few seconds somewhere else and so on all along the line; curves have been straightened, bridges constructed at immense cost, to provide for faster trains. The very cross-overs which have caused so much trouble were constructed to save the twelve minutes or more that are now lost by the new order, compelling engineers to stop their trains before taking them.

Partly because engineers disobeyed orders and took these cross-overs at a high rate of speed instead of according to rules, and partly, perhaps, because of faulty construction, the very means which the road has provided for the benefit of the service has now caused a reaction and the people who have been clamoring for faster service are now pleading that safety be made the first consideration. This is as it should be. What will a man give in exchange for his life?

VILLAINOUS AND PROFESSIONAL BEGGARS.

(New Britain Herald.)

The news dispatches yesterday contained an account of a father and mother in France who gouged out the eyes of their five-year-old son so that they might be better able as beggars to pray upon the sympathetically inclined of the world. Yesterday a woman, sixty-seven years old, was found lying unconscious in a gutter in Newark, N. J. She had a mass of matted hair in her apron in her hands a sack containing a variety of junk, and in her ragged clothes were some half a dozen children.

Partly because engineers disobeyed orders and took these cross-overs at a high rate of speed instead of according to rules, and partly, perhaps, because of faulty construction, the very means which the road has provided for the benefit of the service has now caused a reaction and the people who have been clamoring for faster service are now pleading that safety be made the first consideration. This is as it should be. What will a man give in exchange for his life?

The first case is one of almost unnumbered kind. It is a characteristic of the professional beggar which is to be found in such numbers in the streets of New Britain and in many not so large. These people have routes and cases have been reported where men and women have been seen in the streets, begging and obtaining their money by begging in the streets. The authorities have endeavored to put a stop to these practices, but have not been able to do so. It is said that a cripple, who comes to New Britain regularly, has been seen in the streets, begging and obtaining their money by begging in the streets.
